

Why do small businesses need cyber insurance?

Cybercriminals aren't only interested in data from big companies. They also have their sights set on small businesses because they know they aren't as likely to have the advanced cybersecurity procedures in place that big enterprises do.

Some companies skip out on top-notch security measures assuming that cyber insurance will cover their costs in the event of a catastrophe. This simply isn't true.

Strong cybersecurity measures are necessary to safeguard your company and are typically a requirement to qualify for insurance coverage. Cyber insurance is really meant to be a backup plan for your cybersecurity in the event of a breach.

3 types of cyber insurance and what they typically cover You can choose from different cyber insurance plans based on your specific business requirements. Here are three key types of coverage every small business needs to be aware of:

Having coverage and being eligible for a payout are NOT the same thing Just because you've been accepted for cyber insurance coverage doesn't mean you are automatically eligible for a payout if your business experiences an incident. Many insurance providers are unwilling to take on what they consider to be excessive risk associated with providing cyber insurance due to the rate and cost of cybercrime right now. To maintain a good standing with a cyber insurance company, you must be compliant with their standards, which usually means having a strong cybersecurity posture. A payout may not be available if, for example, you meet the policy requirements at the time of acceptance, but then fall out of compliance by the time you experience an incident.

Why your small business needs an IT partner

Getting and keeping coverage can be difficult for a small business to navigate on its own. By partnering with an IT service provider, you can not only prevent incidents but also ensure compliance with your cyber insurance provider's policy requirements, increasing your chances of a payout in the event of an incident.

Contact us today to schedule a no-obligation consultation and find out how we can help you increase your chances of receiving cyber insurance coverage.

